20TH CENTURY LIMITED

No other train fired the imagination like New York Central's 20th Century Limited. Its exclusive clientele and blistering 16-hour schedule between New York and Chicago made it the stuff of legends for 65 years. A favorite with business and industry leaders, its luxurious accommodations — including a red carpet on the platform at New York — also attracted stars of stage and screen, further fueling the train's celebrity status and romantic image.

Now you can book your trip aboard this famed streamliner, with this exciting series of HO Scale models from Walthers, coming in 2008-2009. Like the prototype, Walthers Century is "Completely New from Diesels to Lookout Lounge," with nine superb cars finished in striking two-tone gray, and matching PROTO 2000® EMD E7 Phase II diesels available in Sound & DCC or standard DC versions.

Order now, and you'll get the special extras included only with the First Edition models, including a special certificate of authenticity, and an in-depth history of each car and loco!

But there's more – you'll also receive a one-of-a-kind figure and accessory set, based on the classic publicity photo that defined "Century" elegance at its finest. The set includes eight hand-painted figures and accessories, plus a 12" long reproduction of the famed red carpet rolled out for passengers as they boarded this flagship train!

Remember, these "extras" will only be available in the First Edition models. Don't delay — make your reservations for this amazing replica at your participating dealer today! To find a hobby shop near you, call 1-800-487-2467 or visit walthers.com.

Support Facilities Expand

RAIL SHOPS

In addition to the big car and locos shops, a typical complex included many smaller buildings that provided support services.

Many were dedicated manufacturing facilities, such as foundries, blacksmith and machine shops, where raw materials were formed and finished into replacement parts.

In an era when wood was commonly used in freight and passenger cars (and earlier, in engine cabs), mills, woodworking and carpentry shops turned out all kinds of interior fittings, as well as dimensional lumber for new construction and repairs.

Separate shops also handled specific types of work, such as rebuilding trucks, brake gear and other equipment.

Keeping track of and storing such a wide range of raw materials also required specialized storage and warehouse buildings, often with their own sidings to speed unloading of supplies. Overhead cranes were often located nearby as well, to handle large and heavy items such as wheels.

Many shop complexes had their own powerhouses and distribution networks to provide a constant supply of electricity, as well as pipelines that carried steam and compressed air throughout the entire facility.

Industrial-style water towers were also found in many of these operations, providing a ready supply of water for cleaning, plumbing, fire protection and more.

With appropriate signs and details, virtually any industrial building kit can be adapted for your railroad shop scene. Typically, these buildings would be located fairly close to larger buildings, such as the Railroad Shop or Car Shop to facilitate handling repair parts moving to and from the various buildings.

Here are just a few ideas to get you started, and you'll find more Cornerstone Series® buildings at your participating dealer, online at walthers.com or in the new 2009 HO Reference Book (#913-209, $14.98 – coming soon in September).

Did You Know?

Flexi-Vans moved bulk mail and express shipments into the 1960s on the Santa Fe's Grand Canyon and Fast Mail, Milwaukee Road Hiawathas, IC's Panama Limited, NYC's Wolverine and others. The cars were usually coupled between the locos and express/baggage cars, or behind the last car to facilitate en route switching. Most of these shipments ended in 1967 when the Post Office cancelled railroad mail contracts.

MODEL FOUR GENERATIONS OF PASSENGER OPERATION

The 1960s were tough times for America's railroads. Freight business was down and passenger service was a shadow of what it had been a few years earlier. Looking for new solutions, the Great Northern turned to an outside marketing firm, resulting in a completely new corporate identity. In 1967, equipment began emerging from the shops in a bold new color scheme that combined "Big Sky Blue" with black roofs, and simple white logos and lettering.

Prominently featured in advertising and promotional materials for the "Empire Builder," the blue paint couldn't stop the rising tide of red ink. For decades, GN, Burlington and Northern Pacific had tried to merge into a single system, and after several years of legal wrangling, the new Burlington Northern finally came into being in March 1970. Along with locos and freight cars, the passenger fleet received a new scheme, this time in Cascade Green with a large white stripe, quickly dubbed the "hockey stick" by railfans.

This would prove to be the last gasp for the BN's own passenger service, as Amtrak began operations in May 1971. Picking and choosing equipment from member railroads, several of the repainted BN cars, along with some still in Big Sky Blue and Empire Builder orange and green (as well as cars from other lines, still in their previous owners paint schemes) were pressed into Amtrak service. While Amtrak began applying its own Platinum Mist scheme in 1972, the brilliant colors of the "rainbow era" lasted into the 1980s. Serving for some years in Amtrak service, many of the cars were retired as soon as new equipment became available.

Walthers has a complete selection of cars to accurately model GN, BN and Amtrak trains in HO Scale from the mid-1950s to the 80s. A complete 1955 "Empire Builder" consist can be created with the 932-9031 series, which features the original orange, green and yellow scheme with the train name in the letter board. Matching PROTO 2000® F units are available in both sound and DCC, and standard DC versions. You can also model the 1967-70 version, with cars and matching F Units in Big Sky Blue. For BN operations, all cars are offered in the "hockey stick" scheme. Amtrak choose several styles of conventional cars from the GN/BN fleet and the models can be used as-is to model the early days. These same cars are offered in the Phase I scheme for later operations. Check out the selection at your nearest hobby shop, or see the complete listing in the 2009 HO Reference Book and online at walthers.com.

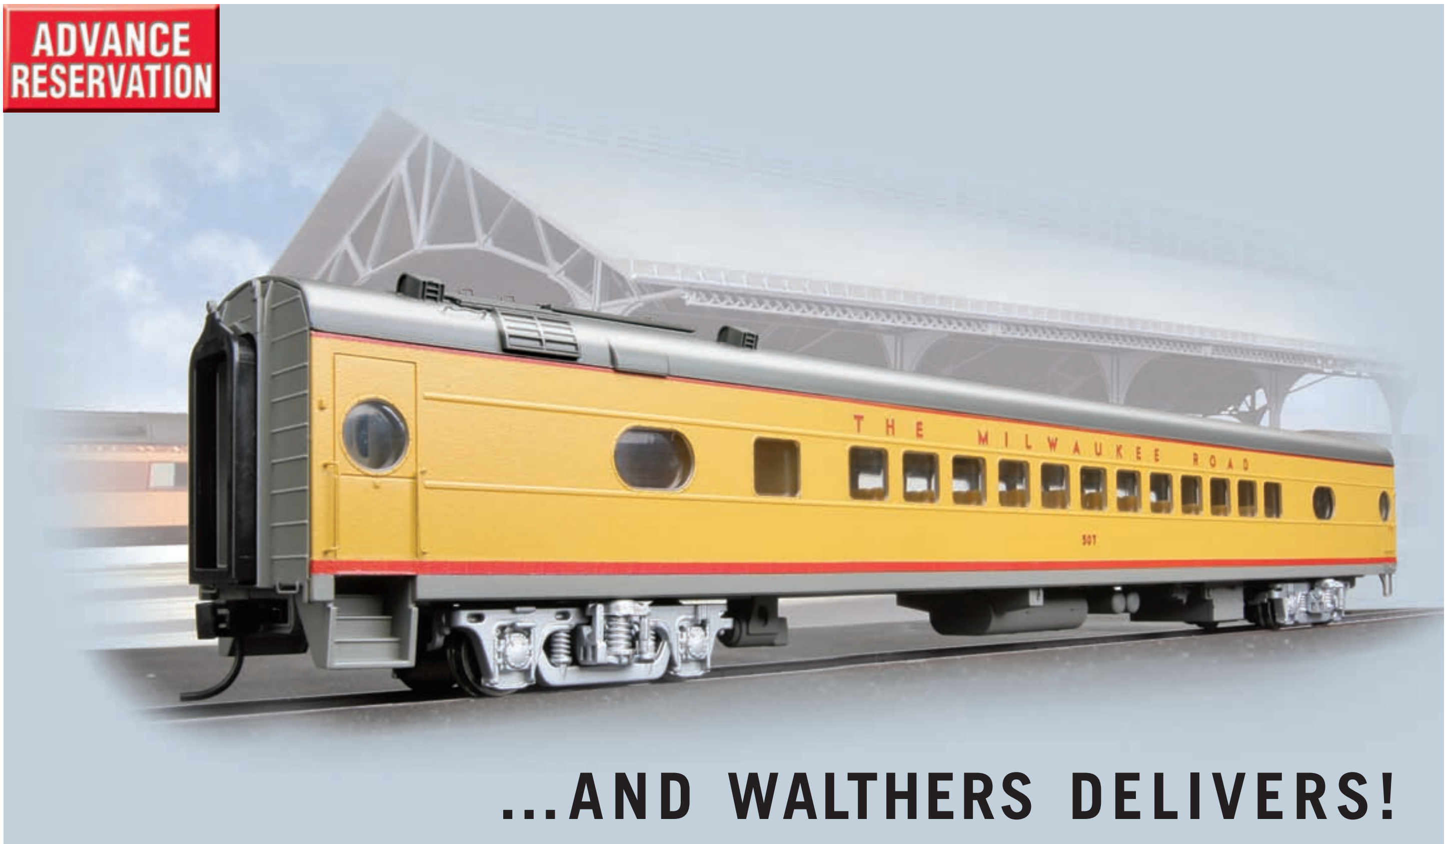
YOU ASKED FOR THEM...



NEW HO SCALE YELLOW & GRAY MILWAUKEE ROAD CARS

By late 1954, Union Pacific was unhappy with how long-time partner Chicago & North Western handled UP passenger trains between Omaha and Chicago. Work to find a new route began, and on September 20, 1955, Milwaukee Road president John P. Kiley announced that they would handle UP's trains, including the flagship City of Los Angeles, starting October 30.

UP required cars in the Cities pool to wear Armour Yellow and Harbor Mist Gray. Milwaukee planned to paint nearly 40 cars for the five trains, but quickly found the UP scheme less expensive to apply and more durable than its own. Starting in 1956, all non-commuter passenger cars and locos began receiving the new colors, which would remain the standard until Amtrak took over in 1971.

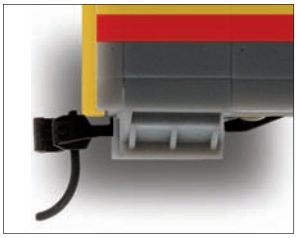
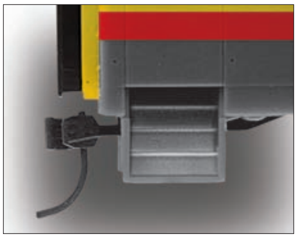
Modeling this exciting era is a snap with Walthers latest HO releases, featuring 13 different cars factory-finished in yellow and gray. In addition to specific skirting and trucks, select cars include modeler-applied parts for folded (pre-1963) or fixed (post-1963) steps — shown below — to model early and later versions!



Build select cars with folded steps (pre-1963)...



... Or Install the fixed steps (post-1963)!

SLOGAN CARS PROMOTE SERVICES

Almost from the beginning, the red-brown freight car with white lettering was the industry standard. For railroads with growing fleets of cars, these mineral-based colors were cheap to make and simple to apply. But as roads began interchanging cars, it became important to quickly identify the owner, and elaborately lettered names and logos appeared.

Refrigerator cars often sported colorful schemes and even more elaborate lettering, transforming the white, light gray, yellow and orange sides (ends and roofs were still brown) into rolling billboards for shippers and their products. The Interstate Commerce Commission finally banned the practice in 1934, imposing new regulations that limited the size of lettering on leased cars. Railroads and shippers who owned their own equipment were still free to do as they pleased, although the Depression left little cash for anything fancy.

By the late 30s, in an effort to boost freight and passenger traffic, some roads began advertising important name trains and services with large slogans, names and artwork. By the 1950s brilliant, multi-color schemes were the order of the day for large roads, and even shortlines freshened up their red-brown and white cars with slogans. In the 1960s, a new generation of bigger freight cars also introduced even bolder, brighter colors. The 70s and 80s saw a return to simpler and cheaper schemes that combined bright colors and large logos, which continues today.

Did You Know?

With many different styles available, changing trucks can be a quick and easy way to backdate, or update your models.

After 1900, various styles of Arch Bar trucks became common, as their bolt-in journal boxes reduced costs. Bolts however could work loose or break, usually with disastrous results, and arch bar trucks were eventually banned from interchange service. Trucks with integrally cast journal boxes, such as the Bettendorf style, became the new standard and were used well into the 1970s, when roller bearing trucks took over.

Wheel sizes were also standardized, with most freight cars riding on 33" diameter and passenger cars 36" diameter wheels. The arrival of bigger and heavier freight cars saw a shift to 36" and larger wheels sizes, except for some taller cars that ride on slightly smaller wheels to meet clearance restrictions.

COVERING YOUR TRACKS

Plastering, painting, adding ground cover and gluing in all those little details creates a lot of debris while you're building your layout.

As soon as your track and roadbed are in place, keep it clean by covering it up with a layer of tape. Masking tape works great because it stays in place and removes easily leaving little residue. Electrical and duct tape are other options. Leave the tape in place until you're ready to add ballast. When the ballast is in place, run an abrasive-type cleaner across the track to make it clean, shiny and ready for your trains.

Did You Know?

On prototype track, ballast improves drainage and helps support trains. On layouts, it makes your right-of-way more realistic. Ballast comes in many sizes and colors to simulate different types of stone.

Ballast should be glued down, but check and correct any track problems first!

Cover the edges of the roadbed with ballast. Between the rails, it should be even with the tops of the ties.

To get the glue into the cracks and crevices, make a wetting agent mixing 10 parts water to one part dish detergent. Apply the wetting agent first — an eyedropper works well — thoroughly wetting the surface. Next, make up a 1:1 solution of white glue and water and apply.

When dry, remove any stray ballast and clean the tops and inside edges of the rails.

SIGNS PAVE THE ROAD TO REALISM

One way to make your streets and highways look more lifelike is to add appropriate signs along the side of the roadway.

The most basic signs are Stop, Yield and street name signs. Other signs include driving directions, highway number markers, railroad crossing signs and warning signs.

Some signs, while not directly related to traffic regulation, are a big part of any highway scene; these include all kinds of informational signs and signs pointing out places of interest.

Street signs have changed greatly over the years. For example, did you know that in the early 1900s some stop signs were yellow and black, and railroad crossing warning signs were black and white? And, since reflectorized materials didn't yet exist, many signs featured marble-sized "cat's eye" glass reflectors for night visibility.

Authentic signs for many eras are available in most scales. With a bit of research, you can pick and choose signs to fit your time period.

DETAIL YOUR BUILDINGS WITH CORNERSTONE MODULARS™

After assembling the buildings for your layout, it's time to finetune the details to create that last bit of realism.

Rooftops

Since most layouts are built below eye level, roofs tend to be the most visible area on any structure. While stores and houses tend to be small and simple (usually just a chimney and toilet vents), factories and industries can be a real challenge with their large areas of flat space.

Most manufacturing operations require vents and air conditioning units to move air in or out of work areas, or control heat, humidity and dust. These can easily be modeled with Walthers Cornerstone Modulars Roof Detail sets, which are available in both HO and N Scales. Large buildings often have a tremendous variety of air-handling equipment in all shapes and sizes, so parts from either scale can be mixed and matched, and installed anywhere on a flat roof.

Fire Escapes

Another great idea for finishing your buildings is to add fire escapes. By the late 1800s, the industrial heart of most major cities was usually near the downtown area. Often located along rivers where space was limited and expensive, land developers were forced to build upward instead of out. Several disastrous and deadly fires in this period led to a major overhaul of city building codes, and fire escapes became standard for large structures. For many decades, these iron (and later steel) stairways were fixtures on factories and could also be found on schools and similar large public buildings.

Modelers working in HO Scale can easily add this detail to models using the Cornerstone Modulars Vintage or Modern Fire Escapes. These complete kits reach up to four stories, and are easily adapted to any large building. The Vintage style features larger balconies for each floor, while the Modern type has longer ladders and smaller platforms. (N Scale fire escape kits are available from other suppliers — check walthers.com or the latest N&Z Reference Book for ideas.)

Did You Know?

You'll find a surprising number of old buildings being used today — and with signs or fresh paint they're easy to model.

Former railroad stations now serve as local museums, visitor's centers, and offices, businesses, or homes.

Former fire stations or car dealerships are prime locations for contractors, with a garage downstairs and offices upstairs. Others have been converted into fashionable offices and restaurants.

Old industrial buildings are often refurbished as upscale condos, with small shops on the ground floor

Look at older buildings in your area for ideas too!

Sometimes a structure is more than it seems. The YMCA Bunkhouse is based on a prototype building but its simple lines, imposing facade and classic details make it easy to imagine the structure as something else.

Take a closer look and it's a bank, look again and you see a library. Picture it in later years when the original owners moved on to larger quarters and it's now home to the local historical society.

Versatile structures like the YMCA Bunkhouse are great, because by adding a few extra details, you can make the building look like it was designed especially for your layout. See the photos for some ideas to get you started.

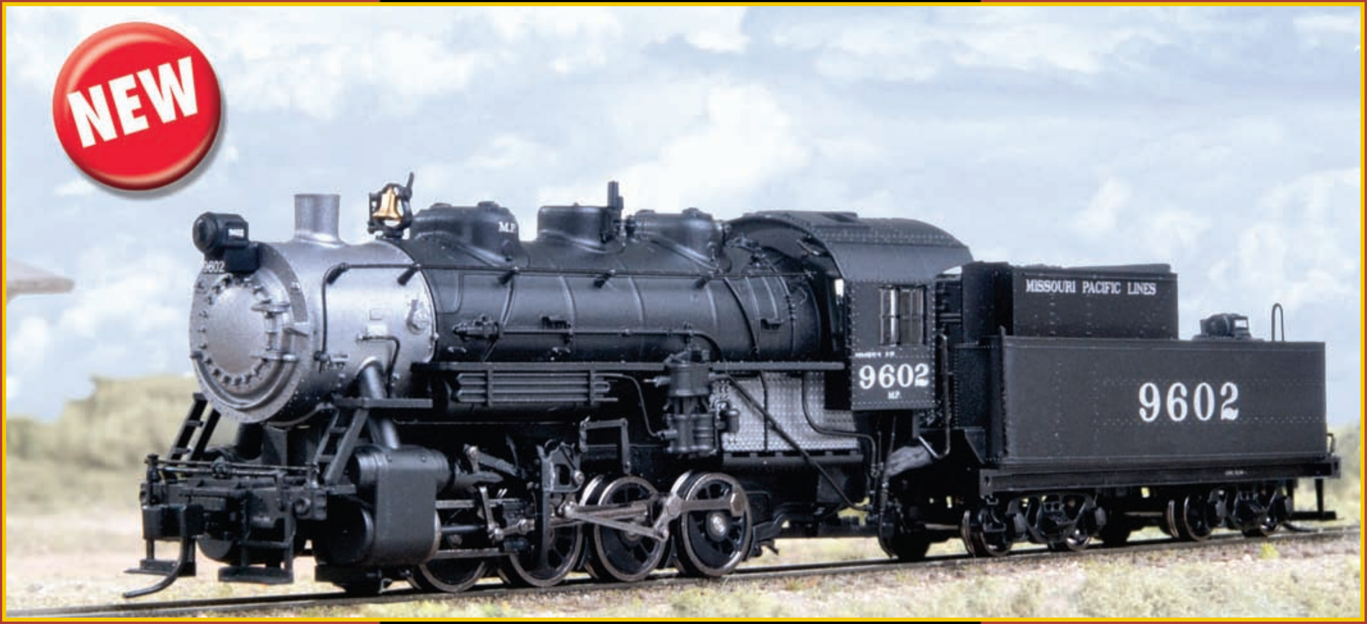
USRA 0-8-0 STEAM LOCOMOTIVE

N SCALE



PROTO FASTFACTS™

In Service: 1918-1950s

Variants: Numerous changes made to tenders and appliances after end of USRA control in 1920; copies built through early 1950s.

Primary Assignments: Yard switching and transfer service, also used as industrial switchers.

By 1917, the arrival of larger and much heavier freight cars had pushed most 0-6-0 designs to their limits. Realizing that railroads needed more powerful switchers, the United States Railway Administration developed plans for an all-new 0-8-0. Up-to-date in all respects, these big switchers were the equals in power of many road freight locomotives from just a few years earlier. The USRA 0-8-0 was well liked by railroads that received it and 175 were completed before government control ended in 1920. More success came in later years, as 35 different roads eventually copied the design. In fact, the last new steam locos built in the US were a series of 0-8-0s, constructed by the N&W in 1951-53 that followed the general outline of the decades-old USRA design.

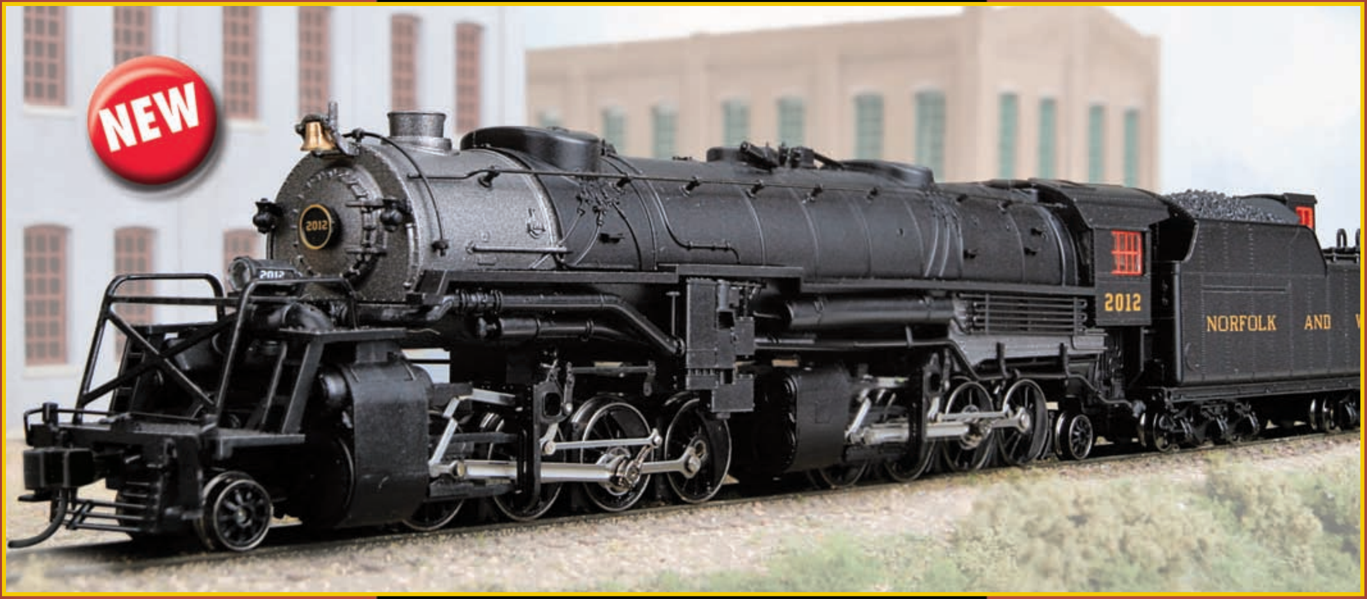
Y-3 2-8-8-2 STEAM LOCOMOTIVE

Now with Sound & DCC

N SCALE



PROTO Fastfacts™

In Service: 1919-1958

Variants: Various appliance changes by railroads that bought used ones from N&W.

Primary Assignments: Heavy coal trains and drag freights.

Although delivered too late for the war effort, the Norfolk & Western received 50 of these USRA engines in 1919, which it classified as Y-3. In 1923 another 30 were ordered with larger tenders (Y-3a), followed by 10 more in 1927 fitted with feedwater heaters.

Several Y-3s were sold to various power-short western railroads during World War II. Although well suited to coal-hauling duties in the Appalachians, the big articulateds proved too slow for most of their new owners and they were retired or sold following the war. N&W's Y-3s remained in service until 1958.

Preproduction model shown, details and colors may vary.

Did You Know?

Like rails, wheels on cars and locos should be cleaned periodically. This can be done using a small abrasive or liquid cleaners made for track.

Engines rely on clean wheels for good electrical pickup, and dirt may be the cause of poor performance.

On cars, dirt can build up on the wheel treads to the point that the car tracks poorly, causing derailments. For easy access, just pop the wheels out of the trucks.

On locos, clean the exposed wheel tread first. Power up your loco enough to turn the wheels or remove the shell and turn the drive by hand to turn the wheels to the next dirty spot.

Be sure to inspect wheels for any defects and check them with a gauge too!

ADD AUTHENTICITY TO YOUR RIGHT-OF-WAY

The addition of a truss system to a basic beam bridge dissipates the load through the truss work across the entire span. This makes the bridge stronger so it can span a longer distance. In use since the late 1800s, truss bridges like this model are ideal above streams, other rail lines, roads and wherever clearance is required below the structure.

Did You Know?
By the 1930s, military planners were using specific model and/or series numbers as well as code names, to identify individual tank designs. Based on the vehicle's size and weight, it could also be grouped into one of three general categories, as a heavy, medium or light tank.

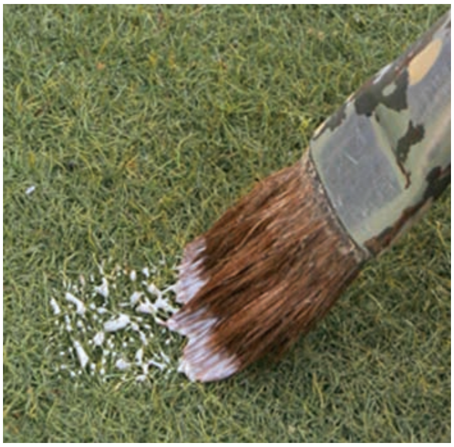
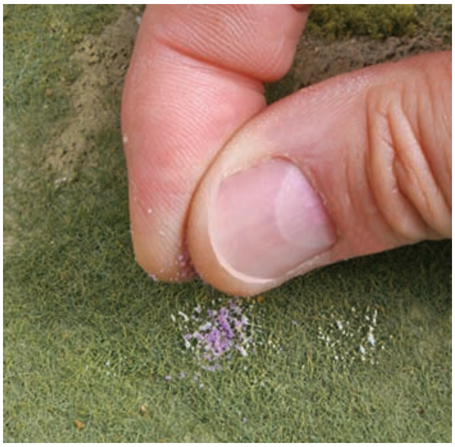
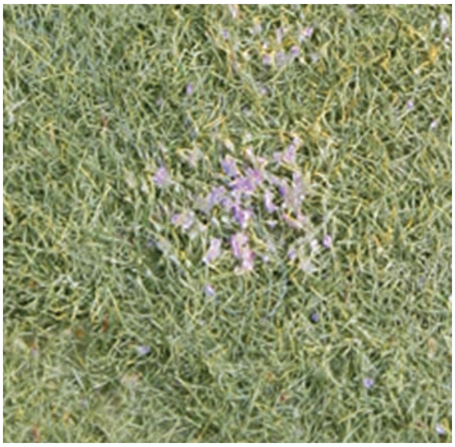
FLOWERS FOR YOUR FIELDS







Adding flowers to fields is a breeze—almost literally! Once you've installed the grass or grass mat of your choice and it has dried, you're ready to start. Using a 50/50 mix of white glue and water, brush just the tops of your grass blades using a very light sweeping motion. Do NOT soak with the glue mixture, just make the top surface damp or leave behind clinging droplets.

While the adhesive is still wet, scatter a small amount of finely ground foam flower material on the wet adhesive. The idea is to get very light, uneven coverage to simulate a wildflower here and there. An easy way to apply the material is to place a pinch in your hand and blow it onto the field. Once the glue mix is dry, vacuum off the excess material. Color choice depends on the region you're modeling, but common colors include bright yellow for dandelions, purple for phlox, white for Queen Anne's Lace and orange for poppies.

Here are some suggested products you can use to try these techniques.

TRANSFORM DULL DOORWAYS WITH WORKING LIGHTS

Every factory doorway or entry needs lighting for safety's sake. On your layout, adding working lights over doorways will catch viewers' eyes and add authenticity and implied activity to your scene. They're easy to add using Cornerstone Series® Built-ups Wall-Mounted Lamps for 30s and later scenes or Modern Lamps for 60s and later structures.

NEW SUPPLIER

INNOVATIVE TRAIN TECH

Looking for background sounds for your layout? Innovative Train Tech makes a wide array of sound modules, speakers and accessories to add realism to layout scenes. Each module is designed to be mounted underneath the layout and includes speaker and power hookups. Speakers can be mounted anywhere—in buildings, under scenery and anywhere else they'll fit. Sounds range from environmental effects such as thunderstorms and trains in the distance to industrial sounds such as machine shops and sawmills. Check out the entire line with clickable sound clips at walthers.com.

Did You Know?
There's nothing quite like the site of a mighty model steam loco roaring along, trailing a cloud of smoke. For generations of modelers, the sight and smell of a smoke-equipped loco is a great way to relive happy memories.

Still a favorite in starter set engines, smoke units are also found in some high-end models, and are also available separately to refit locos. In addition, smoke units can also be used in factory smokestacks, house chimneys, or ship models to add more animation to a layout or display.

Before adding a unit however, be sure there's enough room inside your model! Since these units generate heat, you may need some air space around them, especially in plastic models.

Smoke fluids are readily available from several suppliers. Most are oil-based materials, so read and follow the instructions for safe handling. For more fun, you may wish to try out some of the scented versions to add a new dimension to your train room or display layout.

Did You Know?

Before starting your next project, take a minute to make sure your tools are safe!

Knife blades with dull or broken ends should be replaced — and make sure the new blades are properly secured in the handles.

Screwdrivers and similar edged tools should be checked for rounded or broken corners and refinished or replaced.

Cords and outer casings on power tools should be checked for any signs of excess wear or damage and replaced. If required, make sure bearings are properly lubricated.

Did You Know?

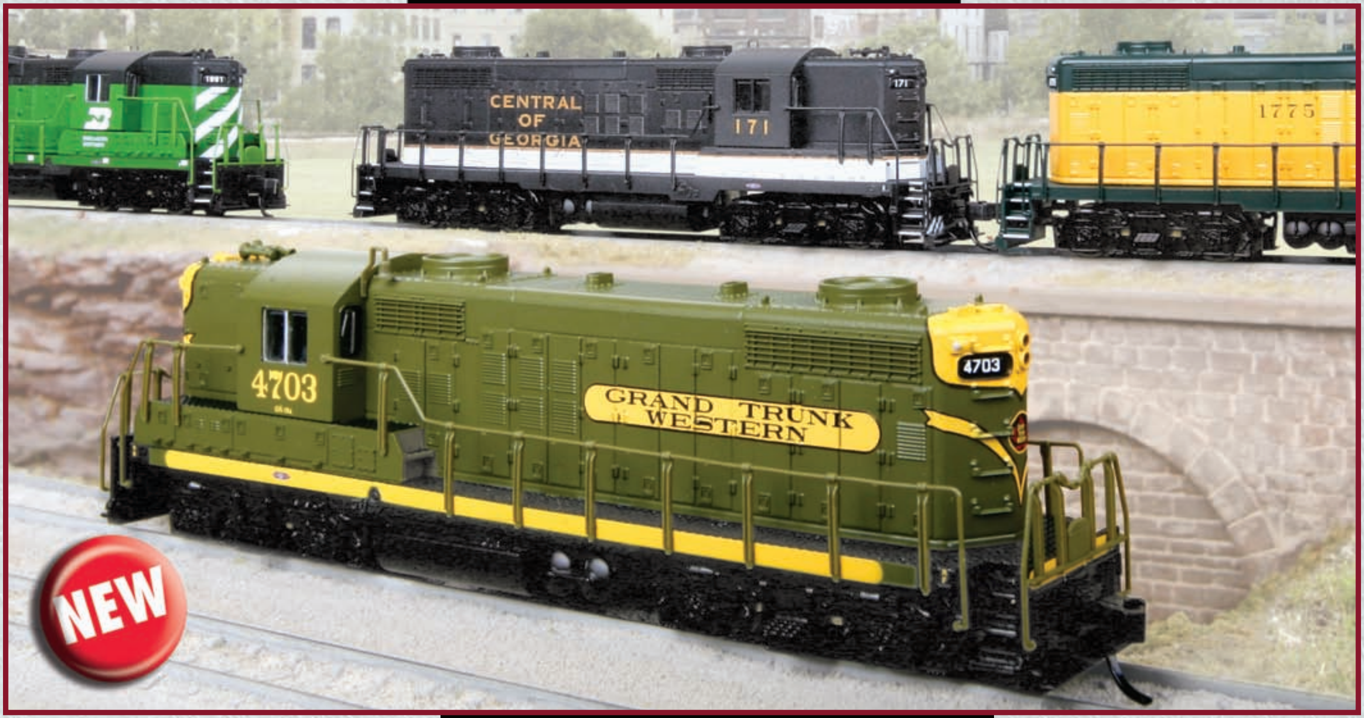
So, how did your favorite railroad paint its structures? Were they cream and green or two-tone gray? Were they run down?

Can't remember? Books and videos are your best source of information — even if there's no book on your prototype, you can find lots of useful ideas in books and videos about railroads that served the same area and hauled similar commodities.

Check the background for billboards, business names, logos, lettering fonts, building styles and color schemes as well as lineside details and industries. You'll also find plenty of information about weathering, faded paint, ballast color, tree mix and other scenery features.

EMD GP18 DIESEL LOCOMOTIVE

N SCALE



920-75212 Series • $99.98 Each • In Stock Now!

PROTO FASTFACTS™

In Service: 1959-present.

Primary assignment: Road freight service.

Variations: Built in high- and short-hood versions.

Introduced in 1959, the 1800-horsepower GP18 shared the same basic and boxy styling, along with two roof-mounted 48" radiator fans of the late GP9. The new model could be identified by metal grids over the air intakes, replacing the "chicken wire" screens used on earlier geeps. The market soon began to move in two directions, and EMD offered both the GP18 and the more powerful GP20. The GP18 remained in production until 1963 when it was replaced by the GP28 with its completely restyled 35-Line body.
